Disastrous (In)Determination Exploring the intersections of domination, desire, and dialogue

With an appearance of increasingly complex crises worldwide, foundations that once felt so solid have begun to crumble. We now see ourselves in a new state of indeterminacy with stakes that are both causes for concern and opportunities for change as the direction of social and political structures become more and more uncertain. For this year's conference, we hope to create a space for scholars to posit their original work concerning these newfound indeterminacies that now define our world. We invite scholars to tackle these questions by looking at the intersections between domination, desire, and dialogue as they relate to the complex ongoing world crises and the structures that render them (in)determinate.
